THE devastating toll of Covid-19 on lives and livelihoods, is aggravated daily by growing stories of government failures, disease control mismanagement, bungling of social relief efforts and an all-out feeding frenzy of corruption by connected cadres.

The picture can seem bleak at first, but a closer look at the Cape metro response effort reveals that much good has been done to slow the spread of Covid-19, and bring new cases under control.

Inspired by this progress, we are advising residents to stay vigilant, so that our health facilities continue to be at lesser risk of being overwhelmed. News last week that the Western Cape has now passed its infection peak, without ever running out of hospital beds, and with capac-
