An allowance for impairment of trade receivables is established when there is objective evidence that the Company will not be able to collect all amounts due according to the original terms of the receivables. The amount of the allowance is the difference between the asset's carrying amount and the present value of estimated future cash flows, discounted at the effective interest rate, or where more appropriate, at the interest rate that the company would have to pay to finance such receivables. The amounts presented in the balance sheet are net of allowances for doubtful receivables estimated by the management based on the long outstanding balances and the assessment of the current of the current economic environment.

Foreign Currency Risk.

As a result of bank balances (favorable and unfavorable) denomination in the United States Dollar, the company's financial position and results can be affected by movement in exchange rates between Tanzanian Shillings (TZS) and United States Dollars (US$). The company does not consider that there is a significant downside risk on holding these foreign currency balances arising form exchange rate movements.
